PREFACE

THE TASK of preparing this bibliography was made a joint project between the Smithsonian Institution and the New York Botanical Garden in 1931 when the senior author was Director of the latter institution. The plan then adopted involved publication under the auspices of the Smithsonian Institution, but when the manuscript was completed to cover items that had appeared up to the end of the year 1935, funds were not available to cover the cost of printing such an extensive work. Neither author anticipated, when work on the project was initiated, that it would reach such large proportions. Current literature was examined through the year 1936 with a view to keeping the manuscript up to date, and December 1936 was made the closing date for the inclusion of bibliographic items, except that parts of continued papers appearing in 1937 have been added.

Under the original plan of publication the forms of citation to periodical literature used in the preparation of the manuscript were not always those preferred by the authors, but are the official ones approved for publications issued under the auspices of the United States National Herbarium. Similarly the decapitalization of all specific names regardless of their sources, except those appearing in actual titles, follows the practice of the National Herbarium. When the plan of publication was changed, the authors were at liberty to select their own forms of presentation. Because of the very large amount of editorial work that would be necessary to make such changes and at the same time to retain consistency, neither author felt justified in devoting time and energy to such a task. Thus, although the work is now actually published under the auspices of an institution that has rather consistently followed somewhat different rules both as to the citation of periodical literature, and in the capitalization of certain types of specific names, some of the forms used are at variance with those utilized in its previous publications such as the "Bradley Bibliography" and the "Catalogue of the Library of the Arnold Arboretum" and its "Supplement."

In 1937, after several attempts to secure publication under the auspices of other institutions and organizations had failed, it was decided to attempt publication by the Arnold Arboretum. An appeal was made to the Trustees of the Harvard-Yenching Institute for a grant to cover a part of the cost of publication. We are under very great obligations to the officials of that institution for their favorable action on our request. Its generous grant doubtless would have made publication possible had we elected to avail ourselves of the kind offices of Doctor H. H. Hu, Director of the Fan Memorial Institute of Biology, Peiping, China, to assist us in seeing the work through the press in China. Encouraged by the grant made by the Trustees of the Harvard-Yenching Institute, and by a smaller grant made by the Smithsonian Institution, the matter was placed before a friend of Harvard University, who prefers to remain anonymous. He very generously offered to supply the balance necessary to cover the cost of printing, provided that publication be effected in the United States and that the work be issued under the auspices of the Arnold Arboretum of Harvard University.

We therefore wish to express our appreciation to the authorities of the Smithsonian Institution for their support of the project since its inception in 1928, to those of the New York Botanical Garden, for the large measure of support granted by that institution from 1931 to date, and to the Smithsonian Institution, to the Trustees of the Harvard-Yenching Institute, and to our anonymous supporter for the financial aid that finally rendered publication possible.

INTRODUCTION

WORK on this bibliography was initiated at the Smithsonian Institution in 1928, when the junior author, engaged in identifying material received by the United States National Museum, found it necessary to familiarize himself with the literature concerning the plants of China. The objective at first was to list only entries referring to papers on the higher groups of plants of the Chinese flora alone. Since, however, a large number of periodicals were to be examined article by article, or in many cases even page by page, it seemed advisable to extend the scope of the project and to include the literature on all groups of plants for all of eastern Asia, except north-eastern Siberia.

The area covered by this bibliography comprises China, Japan, Formosa, Korea, Manchuria, Mongolia, Tibet, and eastern and southern Siberia. The major published papers appertaining to adjacent areas, such as the Philippines, Indo-China, Siam, Burma, India, and central and northern Asia are included because of their importance in the study of the plants of eastern Asia, and because through them the subsidiary literature on these areas can be reached. Since there is no sharp differentiation between the floras of eastern and of central Asia, the precise geographical boundaries established in the beginning of the project were gradually extended as the work progressed and more of the literature on central Asia and adjacent Siberia was included. It should be remembered, however, that the literature on the border regions north and west of China has been less completely covered, because the limits were extended after the work was begun, and because of our practice of including only the most important works dealing with these regions.

The objective has been to record those papers to which botanists who are concerned with the study of the plants of this area must or should refer. Papers devoted entirely to physiology, morphology, cytology, and genetics, and those without distinct taxonomic, geographic, or economic significance are omitted. In the lower groups, especially of the fungi and algae, the demarcation between taxonomic and physiological and morphological aspects is so obscure that less completeness can be expected than in the literature dealing with the higher plants. Hence, certain users of this bibliography will doubtless fail to find some papers which are perhaps more worthy of inclusion than are others which have been included. Although the point of view in selection has been taxonomic, admitted papers are by no means confined to that field. Papers on ecology, phytogeography, exploration, economic botany, the history of botany, bibliography, phylogeny, pathology, agriculture, horticulture, forestry, materia medica, pharmacy, biography, and many other subjects have been listed. Special attention has been given to bibliographies, because of their value in indicating other data accessory to those made directly available here.

An attempt has been made to include all independently published works, as well as all papers appearing in periodical literature that appertain to the region covered. In the latter group the method of procedure was, first, to examine page by page or article by article the principal botanical serials, and later the secondary ones, listing all original articles referring to our field, and noting references to other pertinent papers. These latter references were subsequently verified, corrected, and annotated by comparison with the originals. The second step was to examine review-serials, bibliographies and catalogues for references later to be verified. Among the more important review-serials so examined the following may be listed: Just's "Botanischer Jahresbericht," "Botanisches Centralblatt," "Botanische Jahrbücher," "Bulletin de la Société Botanique de France," "Botanical Abstracts" and its successor, "Biological Abstracts," "Japanese Journal of Botany," "Lingnan Science Journal," and "Acta Phytotaxonomica et Geobotanica." In current literature the mimeographed weekly publication, "Plant Science Literature," issued by the library of the Bureau of Plant Industry of the United States Department of Agriculture, has proved to be invaluable.

Numerous papers are never noticed in reviews, abstracts, and literature lists. We have located many such articles through incidental references in various texts or among the literature citations in formal taxonomic treatments. In all probability some valuable items have been overlooked. As occidental libraries are of necessity handicapped in securing oriental literature, and as most occidental reviewers and specialists are unable to deal directly with works in other than the principal occidental languages, omissions of some Japanese, Chinese, and Russian works are to be expected. Publications known to us only through references found in reviews and elsewhere, and of which no copies were available to us, are designated as "not seen." We have, however, made serious attempts to examine each article admitted, except where they were not available to us in the libraries in which the work was principally done. The source of such references is stated when this source itself may be of interest to those seeking the unverified works. It is hoped that those who may detect omissions or errors will notify the authors. Such data may then be included in supplements, which it will be desirable to publish from time to time because of the continually increasing botanical literature on this area. During the later stages of the work it has been very gratifying to the authors to find how comparatively few titles not already listed have appeared in recent bibliographies or in reviews. On the whole, and excepting the possible omissions noted above, the authors feel confident that a high degree of completeness has been attained.

It has often been extremely difficult to determine whether or not to include certain types of literature such as papers on plant pathology, horticulture, agriculture, and forestry, and as a result there is a certain lack of uniformity. Some periodicals, which are almost wholly confined to these marginal subjects, have not been examined, while incidental papers on the same subjects appearing in periodicals which were examined in detail have often been included. It is exceedingly difficult, in compiling an extensive bibliography, properly to evaluate various articles. This is especially true of horticultural papers, for in this field compiled and repeated information is particularly abundant. In such periodicals as "The Gardener's Chronicle," "The Garden," and similar horticultural serials, which do contain much of value in the included botanical papers, we may have erred in including too many purely horticultural articles.

The transliteration of languages using non-Roman alphabets, especially Chinese, Japanese, and Russian, has been necessary throughout because of printing and editorial requirements. The rules of the Library of Congress for transliterating Russian have been used, the correspondence of letters being as follows:

А а	а	І і	і	С с	с	Ъ ъ
Б б	б	Й й	й	Т т	т	Ы ы	у
В в	в	К к	к	У у	у	Ь ь	'
Г г	г	Л л	л	Ф ф	ф	Ѣ ѣ	іе
Д д	д	М м	м	Х х	kh	Э э	е
Е е	е	Н н	н	Ц ц	ts	Ю ю	іи
Ж ж	zh	О о	о	Ч ч	ch	Я я	іа
З з	z	П п	п	Ш ш	sh	Ѧ ѧ	ф
И и	і	Р р	р	Щ щ	shch	Ѩ ѩ	у

Due to official changes promulgated by the Kerensky government in the Russian language in 1918, certain apparent inconsistencies will appear in the transliteration of some titles.

Most of the Chinese characters have been transliterated according to the widely used Sir Thomas Wade system. The rendering of Chinese into Roman letters, or romanization, has been done almost exclusively by the chief and staff of the Division of Orientalia of the Library of Congress, to whom the authors are thereby deeply indebted. The transliteration of Japanese, rendered chiefly according to the Hepburn system, has been done by a number of translators who have generously given much time to this work. Because the authors lack intimate knowledge of the oriental and Slavic languages, and of many details of the more familiar western languages, absolute uniformity of treatment has not been possible. Some inevitable inconsistencies are due to changes occurring in the various languages during the wide period of time covered and to the varying practices of numerous authors and editors.

Russian, Japanese, and Chinese titles of separate books, but not of articles in serials, have been both transliterated and translated. Such titles in serials and periodicals have been translated only, but the full title or titles of the serials can usually be found by referring to the list of abbreviations and full titles, p. xiii.

An exception to the rules of transliterating Russian, Japanese, and Chinese according to the Library of Congress procedure, the Hepburn system and the Wade system, respectively, has been made in the case of the names of authors who have themselves consistently transliterated their names according to other systems, such forms having become thoroughly established in botanical literature. In these cases no rigid rules can be satisfactorily applied, and the preferences or practices of the authors concerned should be followed. Where authors are not consistent in rendering their names in Roman letters, cross references have been given for the major variations. The greatest difficulties have been found in the Chinese names. Many Chinese authors do not appreciate the confusion arising from random and inconsistent transliterations of their names. Because of the difficulties involved it has been considered appropriate to give all Chinese names in full, except those of certain well-known authors, such as W. Y. Chun, R. C. Ching, and H. H. Hu, who consistently publish with, and are well known by, their initials only. A reference list of Chinese authors with their corresponding characters will be found in the appendix, p. 584. It would be very desirable if every publication in Chinese bore, associated with the author's name in characters, the romanization of the full name just as the author wishes it to appear. Such a convention would undoubtedly make for greater dissemination and serviceability of the papers of oriental writers and would further promote that friendly interchange of ideas among diverse peoples, which is the keynote of modern science.

The names of Japanese botanists as they appear in current literature are usually rendered in Roman letters with much more uniformity than are Chinese names. However, in order to reduce confusion, the practice has been adopted of giving the full romanized names in all cases where there are two or more authors with the same family name. Otherwise initials only have been used. However, the supplementary list of Japanese author's names on p. 587 gives the full romanization wherever the characters are available.

Practically all periodicals and serial titles are abbreviated. Because of the large number of serials, over 1200 being referred to, these abbreviations with their full titles and numerous variations in their names, together with much subsidiary information useful in locating the original works in libraries and catalogues, are given, p. xiii. Not all variations in the titles of these serials are given here, because in some cases only one or a very few references were taken from certain serials, and variations in earlier and later numbers were not observed. When users need more precise and complete information concerning these serials, reference should be made to that monumental publication of the American Library Association, the "Union List of Serials" and its supplements, to the larger library catalogues, and to other basic bibliographic works. Because of the unfamiliarity of western and oriental botanists with the Russian language, the abbreviations here used are those of the non-Russian titles of the serials from that country. When there is no such foreign language title, the abbreviation is based on the transliterated Russian title. The abbreviations of Chinese and Japanese serials which have titles in both occidental and oriental languages are based on the occidental titles, but if the title appears only in oriental characters the abbreviation is based on a translation. The full Russian, Japanese, and Chinese titles in transliterated form can usually be secured by referring to the list of abbreviations and full titles and the reference lists of oriental serials, p. 562-583.

In the main the form of citation for series, volumes, pages, and illustrations is that adopted by most American botanists, and is derived from the "Rules for citation adopted by the Madison (Wisconsin) Botanical Congress."<sup>1</sup> Changes and additional forms have been adopted as necessary to meet the requirements of the almost infinite number of variations in forms of publication. It is the belief of the authors that practically every conceivable form and variation in indicating series, volumes, etc. has at some time been used, so numerous have been those observed in the course of this work. To devise a system for citing all periodicals uniformly and clearly has been a difficult task, and one only in part successful. In some cases the reasons for the form will doubtless be apparent only when the publication is at hand. It has been the aim in forming the abbreviations to make them so clear that the periodicals can be readily located even by the uninitiated and inexperienced, and to eliminate possible confusion when similar titles are involved. We have endeavored in doubtful cases to give too much rather than too little information. No extravagant claim is made as to the total accuracy or completeness of the citations, but within the limits imposed by the size of the task and the difficulties encountered in its preparation these citations will be found to be reasonably accurate and complete.

To ascertain the exact date of publication of a work is often a most difficult task. Obviously, extensive investigation into the exact date of publication of every entry in a bibliography of the size of this cannot be expected. Such investigation has been made whenever feasible. Reference to the source of such information has often been given. Since titles of articles are usually short and often fail to give the reader sufficient information concerning the content of the work, annotations are here added to supply this need. Besides additional information on the content or character of the works cited, the annotations contain much information on re-publications and comments by other workers; there are about 1400 cross references. However, users are warned not to place too great reliance upon these brief annotations for completeness of information, because it is obvious that in preparing a large bibliography of great diversity each article or book could be only superficially scanned. Doubtless in some cases valuable data have been omitted from the annotations or erroneously recorded. Again we ask the indulgence of our readers and their cooperation in indicating errors for possible future supplements.

As one scans the numerous titles in this work, long and short, one is impressed by the apparent fact that most of them are descriptive and inclusive. There are, however, certain types of titles that are most exasperating to the bibliographer who attempts to determine whether or not an article qualifies for inclusion in a bibliography limited to certain geographic areas. Examples are "Orchidaceae novae," "Orchidologische Beiträge," "Plantes cellulaires exotiques nouvelles," "Neue Cyperaceen," "Diagnoses neuer Cyperaceen," "Neue Flechten," "Gramineae novae," "Einige neue Pilze," and numerous similar ones. In all such inadequately titled articles one must examine each individual entry before he can safely accept or reject it. In such a title as "Diagnoses d'espèces nouvelles" two words would have indicated at least the major group involved, and in "Decades plantarum novarum vel minus cognitarum" a slight change and the addition of one word would have indicated the major group and the area involved. Either of these titles might apply to any group of plants in the algae, fungi, musci, hepa-

There are a certain number of absolutely misleading titles. "On the plants of Kohima and Munepore" on its face applies to Indian species, and yet it contains the original description of one species from south-eastern China and a critical note on another one. From "Oxalidaceae novae Americanae" one would expect to find only American species, yet this article contains the original descriptions of two new species from eastern Asia, and from "Studies in American plants" one has no right to expect to find a new name for a Formosan species. From "Ueber einige von J. Bornmueller im Jahre 1900 auf den Canarischen Inseln gesammelte Uredineen" one would naturally expect to find only Canary Island species considered, yet we note that the article contains the original description of Aecidium hamamelidis based on a specimen from Japan. "Descriptions of plants collected by William Gambill, M. D., in the Rocky Mountains and Upper California" actually contains the description of one new species from Canton, China. "The genus Fraxinus in New Mexico and Arizona" and "The North American species of Chaetochloa" contain one new name each for species known only from China. "The linear-leaved North American species of Potamogeton, section Axillares" contains the descriptions of two new species from China and Manchuria and "Recent discoveries in the Newfoundland flora" contains a new name for a strictly Japanese variety of Calamagrostis. Perhaps the least suspected title of this type that we examined was "The London clay flora" a palaeobotanical work published in 1933. In it we find the eastern Asiatic genus Platycarya reduced to Petrophiloides with a new binomial Petrophiloides strobilacea (Sieb. & Zucc.) Reid & Chandler (Platycarya strobilacea Sieb. & Zucc.) for a common Chinese tree. "The mosses and hepaticae collected in Central Africa by the late Right Rev. Hannington, Bishop of Mombasa, F. L. S., F. G. S., &c, with some others, including those gathered by M. H. Johnston on Mount Kilimanjaro" seems to be definite. Intrigued by the words "and some others" all entries were examined and we find included the original descriptions of new species from Japan, Borneo, Madagascar, Mauritius, Bourbon, Java, and South America. A semi-entomological title "Ants in their diverse relations to the plant world" published in "Ants of the American Museum Congo expedition" (and certainly from the latter title one would not expect to find references to eastern Asiatic plants) includes data on Cordyceps japonensis from Japan. While we have scanned all individual entries in suspected titles, we have undoubtedly at times trusted too fully to titles as given, and doubtless may thus have overlooked some papers which would qualify for inclusion because they may contain references to one or a few species from the vast area we have attempted to cover.

Occasionally one notes an author, or editor, who is apparently not sure of his title, or perhaps one who is not interested in consistency. An example of this type is "Un gaillet méconnu de la flore Chinoise." This is the actual title, but in the table of contents it appears as "Un nouvelle Rubiacée Chinoise, Galium Hemsleyanum Beauverd," and on page 266 of the volume it appears again as "Un nouvelle Rubiacée Chinoise."

With the difficulties of a bibliographer in mind, fully realizing our own short-comings—for neither author was formally trained in bibliographic procedure—and with practically every language of Europe involved as well as many thousands of entries translated from the Chinese and Japanese—and neither author poses as a philologist—we crave the indulgence of those who detect errors and omissions. Our objective has been to be as accurate and as inclusive as possible within our own limitations and the limitations of the library resources of the institutions in which the major part of the work was done. Our hope is that the work will be a real aid to that wide group of botanists interested in the study of the rich and varied flora of eastern Asia, for after all a botanical bibliography is merely a tool to be used by working botanists.

The primary use of the bibliography is to aid students and investigators dealing with eastern Asiatic plants to discover what has been written on their special subjects, and to direct them to such works. In other words, it has been prepared for the use of botanists. It is well known that a vast amount of effort is needlessly expended by investigators and research workers in duplicating work already accomplished elsewhere, because through inadequate guides to the literature they are unaware of what has been done by others. It is hoped that this work will materially aid biographers in their tasks of seeking information on various workers and their publications in the field of eastern Asiatic botany. With this end in view many biographical sketches of at least the more important botanists who have worked extensively on the eastern Asiatic flora have been included.

The source literature in botanical bibliography is very great. Besides the various review journals to which reference has been made, certain outstanding publications deserve mention. Pritzel's "Thesaurus"<sup>2</sup> is the best known and most exhaustive work of its type, being remarkably complete and accurate for the independent works published previous to 1872. This is supplemented by Jackson's "Guide."<sup>3</sup> The extensive

"Catalogue of Scientific Papers" (1800-1900) compiled by the Royal Society of London, and its successor, the "International Catalogue of Scientific Literature" (1901-1914) cover the periodical literature for over a century. The "Bradley Bibliography," 5 volumes, published by the Arnold Arboretum (1911-18) is remarkably complete for the literature on the woody plants of the world up to 1900. The one bibliographic work devoted in part to the area covered by this bibliography is that of Komarov,<sup>4</sup> but it does not go into detail on the shorter papers in periodical literature. As contrasted to the present work, which contains in excess of 21,000 author entries, Komarov's work of 1928 contains but 1,226. Certain published library catalogues are very useful, notably those of the Arnold Arboretum, the British Museum (Natural History), and the Royal Botanic Gardens, Kew. Of card catalogues the outstanding ones are the Union Catalogue issued by the Library of Congress and the author-subject catalogues of certain of the larger libraries, notably the United States Department of Agriculture and the New York Botanical Garden. For references to the published illustrations of plants the older work of Pritzel<sup>5</sup> and its greatly amplified modern counterpart, the "Index Londinensis,"<sup>6</sup> cover the field.

Only very limited funds have been available to the authors during the preparation of this bibliography. Small grants were received from the Smithsonian Institution, from the Joseph Henry Fund, National Academy of Sciences, from the Elizabeth Thompson Fund, with some contributions from the authors themselves. These sums have been used largely for essential translation services covering the Chinese, Japanese, and some Russian literature. Although only these limited funds were available, it has been possible to compile data, to type the manuscript, and to check the references through the extensive assistance received through the several relief agencies in New York City. Without this assistance granted through the New York Botanical Garden, and without the services of the numerous workers who have loyally devoted themselves to the task, the project could not have been brought to completion in any reasonable time. To the original Emergency Work Bureau of New York, financed for several years by private funds, and to its succeeding organizations, the Federal Civil Works Administration, the Works Progress Administration, and the Emergency Relief Bureau of the Department of Public Welfare of New York City we are indebted for the assistance granted to the New York Botanical Garden. Additional aid was also received in Washington through the Civil Works Administration, and the Works Progress Administration. The services of many of the individuals assigned to this enterprise have been utilized not only in the more or less routine phases of the project, but also in critical editorial work, in the checking of the typed entries on the original papers, in the actual examination of much literature, especially that in the Slavic languages, and in proof reading. This work has been done largely in the library of the New York Botanical Garden. In the group of employees assigned to that institution we wish particularly to express our appreciation to Mr. V. C. Asmous for his consistently efficient library work on this project. Acknowledgment to the institutions and the anonymous friend of Harvard University that provided the funds that made publication of this large work possible is made in the Preface. We wish also to express our appreciation to the Harvard-Yenching Institute for another favor granted by courteously loaning to The Lord Baltimore Press the Chinese and Japanese type necessary for the composition of the appendices wherein it was essential that characters be used.

Probably more original entries have been prepared in the library of the United States Department of Agriculture than in any other institution. To the staff of that organization we are indebted for the extensive and invaluable aid always courteously extended. We are also indebted to the staffs of the Library of Congress, United States National Museum, Smithsonian Institution, New York Botanical Garden, Arnold Arboretum, American Geographical Society, American Museum of Natural History, New York Public Library, and Columbia University Library. Librarians of other institutions in the United States as well as in Canada, England, France, Germany, Austria, Japan, and China have also generously responded to inquiries concerning works not available to us.

1856. Somoku-dzusetsu. [Iconography of plants indigenous to, cultivated in, or introduced into Nippon (Japan).] Ed. 1, 20 books. 1856; ed. 2, 20 books. 1874; ed. 3, 20 books, with supplements, in 4 volumes. 1907-12.

This is the first illustrated flora of Japan. It is in Japanese with Latin names, and was written in 1832. The English title does not appear on the first two editions but does on the others. As originally planned this work was to contain herbs, trees and shrubs, and Glumiferae and vascular cryptogams. Only the part on herbs was published, the trees and shrubs being prepared in manuscript form only, and the rest not prepared at all. W. T. Swingle, U. S. Dept. of Agriculture, Washington, has received from M. Shirai a transcribed copy of the author's manuscript of the trees and shrubs consisting of 10 volumes in 22 books. The first edition contains a few Latin and Dutch names. The Latin names in the second edition were edited by Savatier. This was published by Yoshio Tanaka, and Motoyoshi Ono and contains prefaces by other prominent Japanese botanists. For separately issued index see Tanaka, Yoshio, and Ono, Motoyoshi, 1874. The third edition of the present work was issued by Makino T. under the title: "Sôtei Sômoku Dzusetsu" with the English title "Sômoku-Dzusetsu. An iconograph of plants indigenous to, cultivated in, or introduced into Nippon (Japan). Part 1. Herbaceous plants." There are 4 volumes, bound in European style, the first published in 1907, the second in 1910, and the other two in 1912. For further comments on this work see Shirai, M., 1926b, p. 225. The "Hong-dzo-dzu-rok" of Iinuma mentioned by Jackson, B. D. 1881; p. 382, is edition 1 of this work.
